Die periodischen Erscheinungen der Reproduktion der Kiefer an der polaren Waldgrenze August Renvall, 1912 Alpine and Polar Treelines in a Changing Environment Gerhard Wieser, 2020-04-09 Concerns have been raised with respect to the state of high altitude and high latitude treelines as they are anticipated to undergo considerable modifications due to global changes and especially due to climate warming As high elevation treelines are temperature limited vegetation boundaries they are considered to be sensitive to climate warming As a consequence in this future warmer environment an upward migration of treelines is expected because low air and root zone temperatures constrain their regeneration and growth Despite the ubiquity of climate warming treeline advancement is not a worldwide phenomenon some treelines have been advancing rapidly others have responded sluggishly or have remained stable This variation in responses is attributed to the potential interaction of a continuum of site related factors that may lead to the occurrence of locally conditioned temperature patterns Competition amongst species and below ground resources have been suggested as additional factors explaining the variability in the movement of treelines This Special Issue book is dedicated to the discussion of treeline responses to changing environmental conditions in different areas around the globe Bulletin of the American Geographical Society American Geographical Society of New York, 1914 Catalogue of the Library of the Arnold Arboretum of Harvard University: Serial publications - Authors and titles Arnold Arboretum. Library, 1914 Ecological Effects of Forest Fires in the Interior of Alaska Harold John Lutz, 1956 Physiological Ecology of the Alpine Timberline W. Tranquillini, 2012-12-06 In the European Alps the importance of forests as protection against avalanches and soil erosion is becoming ever clearer with the continuing increase in population and development of tourism The protective potential of the mountain forests can currently only be partially realised because a considerable proportion of high altitude stands has been destroyed in historical times by man's extensive clearing of the forests The forests still remaining are of limited effectiveness due to inadequate density of trees and over maturity Considerable efforts however are now being made in the Alps and other mountains of the globe to increase the high altitude forested area through reforestation to raise depressed timberlines and to restore remaining protection forests using suitable silvicultural methods to their full protective value This momentous task if it is to be successful must be planned on a sound foundation An important prerequisite is the assembly of scientific facts concerning the physical environment in the protection forest zone of mountains and the course of various life processes of tree species occurring there Since the introduction of practical field techniques it has been possible to investigate successfully the reaction of trees at various altitudes to recorded factors and the extent to which they are adapted to the measured situations Such ecophysiological studies enable us to recognize the site requirements for individual tree species and the reasons for the limits of their natural distribution International Catalogue of Scientific Literature, 1901-1914, 1919 Catalogue of the Library of the Arnold Arboretum of Harvard University Arnold Arboretum. Mountain Timberlines Friedrich-Karl Holtmeier,2009-03-15 For more than 40 years I have been engaged in timberline research Thus one could suppose that writing this book should not have been too difficult It was harder however than expected and in the end I felt that more questions had arisen than could be answered within its pages Perhaps it would have been easier to write the book 30 years ago and then leave the subject to mature Lastly it was the late Prof Heinz Ellenberg who had convinced me to portray a much needed and complete picture of what we know of the timberline with special respect to its great physiognomic structural and ecological variety The first version of this book was published in the German language Holtmeier 2000 Nevertheless I was very delighted when Prof Martin Beniston encouraged me to prepare an English edition for the series Advances in Global Change Research which guaranteed a wider circulation Timberline is a worldwide and very heterogeneous phenomenon which can only be presented by way of examples My own field experience is necessarily limited to certain timberline areas such as the Alps northern Scandinavia northern Finland and many high mountain ranges in the western United States and Canada However my own observations and the results of my and my previous collaborators research were essential for developing the concept of the book and became integrated into the picture of timberline that is presented in the following chapters Centralblatt für das gesamte Forstwesen ,1926 Zentralblatt für das gesamte Forstwesen ,1925 Translation ,1933
