More Fragments From France Bruce Bairnsfather, 2015-07-08 Excerpt from More Fragments From France Parts V VIII War carries with an over measure of sadness and misery of all kinds It is of course not only the men on the fighting line who suffer from hardship and from wounds and who are ready to meet the final sacrifice of life itself but the circles of their home folks the mothers the sisters the wives the loved ones who if all went right would become wives whose anxieties for those on the fighting lines become themselves tragedies Any man who without sacrifice of truth or concealment of perils and troubles which are too real to be made light of can do something to give to the boys at the front and to the home folks in the rear some diversion from the sadness and the strain who can make clear that even in the midst of trouble and on the edge of tragedy man is in his nature capable of finding in his surroundings and in life itself the sense of humour which serves to lighten the cloud or sadness such a man is a benefactor in the largest sense of the term Captain Bairnsfather has had long practical experience in the fighting line He has been in the service from the beginning of the War and for a large part of that time has been actively engaged at the front The early breaks in his service in the field and in the trenches were caused by the necessity of retiring to hospital for the healing of honourable wounds Bairnsfather is evidently a man of such elasticity of temperament that no amount of fatigue or hardship or peril or pain can quench the ebullition of his spirit About the Publisher Forgotten Books publishes hundreds of thousands of rare and classic books Find more at www.forgottenbooks.com This book is a reproduction of an important historical work Forgotten Books uses state of the art technology to digitally reconstruct the work preserving the original format whilst repairing imperfections present in the aged copy In rare cases an imperfection in the original such as a blemish or missing page may be replicated in our edition We do however repair the vast majority of imperfections successfully any imperfections that remain are intentionally left to preserve the state of such historical works
