DIV.,1971 Time optimal trajectory for the P 3C ASW aircraft are developed The optimization program is based on the use of the Energy State Approximation and a unique graphical construct Certain features of the program are verified by comparison to NATOPS manual flight test results while verification of the actual time savings reported requires implementation of a recommended flight test program This study establishes that flight path optimization procedures and a minimal data base can now be used in improving operational performance For the P 3C application increases in the average transit speeds of up to to 70 knots were demonstrated
