

Red Sox win Series, 278-1

MICHAEL MADDEN

It hasn't diminished all that much. The mornings come, sleep ends, and I sometimes find myself waking and still saying to myself, "It couldn't have happened. They didn't really lose that game."

So I talked with Mike Cieleski. I asked Cieleski if he could compute the random waywardness of life and tell me exactly how many games would have to be played for it again to end that way. Cieleski said he would try.

"Two outs in the 10th," I tell him.

"OK."

"Nobody on base."

"Uh-huh."

"Gary Carter up."

"Right."

"Calvin Schiraldi pitching, the crowd deadly quiet and Keith Hernandez already back in the locker room, peeling off his uniform."

"Gotcha."

Now, some background. Cieleski, a young man from Brookfield, Wis., is the originator of a wonderful baseball board game that is extraordinarily sophisticated and most realistic. It is called Pursue The Pennant #44-45, P.O. Box 1045, Brookfield, Wis. 53005, and is played with dice and cards bearing the statistical idiosyncracies of major league players. It even comes with its own ballpark, games in Fenway Park obviously being much different from games in the Astro dome (Cieleski, for instance, soon will play in the difference in home runs during the day and at night in Oakland).

Beyond the statistical scenario of Pursue The Pennant (you can picture Bill James challenging the Elias Sports Bureau for a long-distance game or two of Pursue The Pennant during lunch, breakfast, the game also boasts all kinds of individual nuances, whether the wind is blowing in or out, artificial turf or grass, Don Sutton's card, for instance, comes with a special SPRT symbol, and the proper roll of the dice with Red Sutton tossed out of the game for dunking the ball, Josequi Andujar, Mario Soto and Pascual Perez have special HOT symbols on their cards, and the proper roll of the dice will result in mayhem — brush-back pitches, brawls, pitchers storming home plate and bumping with umpires).

But the game is remarkable in its ability to duplicate real baseball players in real baseball situations. Sammy Stewart pitching against Kirk Gibson will find more than a few balls atop the roof of Tiger Stadium.

And on a sunny afternoon in Milwaukee in late September, Cieleski and I began play in the upcoming playoff series between the Red Sox and Angels. The Pursue The Pennant series ended with Boston beating the Angels in seven, Roger Clemens pitching and winning the final game. Later the real series was played and ...

But this time I wanted to know the past. This time I wanted Cieleski to play the game and tell me whether the past was as incredible as it seemed. This time I wanted to know whether the real was unreal.

This time I wanted Cieleski to stake up his game from two outs in the 10th inning, the Red Sox leading by two runs, nobody on base for the Mets, and then tell me how long it would take for the Mets to win. He promised to give it a try. The word, the word from the weary, came back.

"I was up all night, until I finally gave up," said the developer of the game. "With two outs — even if you get one or two base-runners — you usually get an out. That's what kept happening. I kept getting an out ... actually, I had thoughts of this like Mets winning never happening."

Cieleski kept trying the next morning. Fifty times he played the game from that point, and 50 times the Red Sox won. One hundred times the dice were rolled, statistics interlocked, probabilities weighed, and 100 times the Mets lost. Then 150 times, 200, on and on to 250 times, the Red Sox winning each and every of the 250 times.

"I really gained an appreciation of what the Mets did in that miracle rally," said Cieleski. "Just as I had an underappreciation, given Boston's background, of what the Red Sox went through in losing the game that way."

Finally, on the 278th try, the Mets won the game," he said. "Carter doubled into the gap in left-center, Kevin Mitchell homered, Ray Knight singled to center and Mookie Wilson homered to left. It took me 278 tries to duplicate what the Mets did in that sixth game."

I was a glutton. I asked him to play out the game in a different way. I asked him to put Dave Stapleton at first base, remove Bill Buckner, and then play out the 10th inning with the game tied, Bob Stanley in for Boston and Wilson at the plate for the Mets.

"Stapleton made the play cleanly," came back Pursue The Pennant's handling of Wilson's grounder to first. The game now moved into the 11th, Doug Sisk pitching for the Mets, and neither team scored, although Dwight Evans saved the game for Boston with a "great overthe-shoulder grab on the dead run" of Wally Backman's long drive to the bottom of the 11th.

Neither team scored in the 12th or 13th (Wilson and Spike Owen each leaving runners on base, although Pursue The Pennant was forced to make a double switch for the Red Sox when Steve Crawford got into trouble in the bottom of the 12th. With Lenny Dykstra on second, Joe Sambito replaced Crawford and batted eighth. Ed Romero simultaneously went in for Owen at shortstop and batted ninth, while Sambito got out of the jam by getting Backman to fly to Dave Henderson in center).

The double switch worked. Romero opened the 14th by doubling to left-center, and he was driven home by a Wade Boggs double to the same spot. Jim Rice ultimately knocked in Boggs. Sambito got the Mets 1-2-3 in the bottom of the 14th and Red Sox won the game, 7-5, and the World Series.

I kept looking at the play-by-play sheets of the mock games. The world seemed more sane somehow. That is, until I looked down to the bottom of the last sheet where there was a sort of P.S.

"Replay of Game 5 of the ALCS," it read. "What would have happened if Gene Mauch had left Mike Witt in to face Rich Gedman with two out in the sixth, no one on, and the Angels leading, 5-4?"

Pursue The Pennant had the answer.

"Gedman grounded a single into center field. Henderson hit a sharp grounder through the hole past Grich at first. Gedman to second (Witt fatigued). Owen hit a high fly to Pettit in center field. Game over."

On second thought, I think I'll take reality.
