Product Warranties United States. National Business Council for Consumer Affairs. Sub-Council on Warranties and Guarantees, 1972 Equitable and Adversarial Pricing for Items Under Warranty Nozer D. Singpurwalla, 2010 Most manufactured goods entail the involvement of three parties a manufacturer an intermediary and a customer Usually the manufacturer warrants his/her product against defects to the intermediary who in turn extends this warranty to the customer Here we consider the manufacturer's warranty to the intermediary providing the free replenishment of failed items within a specific period Specifically we focus on the matter of how manufacturer and intermediary arrive upon a unit price per item that the manufacturer can levy against the intermediary First we discuss two equitable scenarios one in which both manufacturer and intermediary strive for fairness with a common probability distribution about the number of unit failures within a prescribed warranty period and the other wherein manufacturer and intermediary have different distributions but they arrive upon a consensus by a process of co operation Then we discuss the adversarial scenario wherein each strives to maximize his/her expected utility without knowledge of the other's utilities and without using a common distribution This latter scenario is perhaps the more realistic one in the sense of what is done in practice However a discussion of the equitable scenario may be useful in matters of litigation pertaining to warranty claims and violations

Determination of Optimal Pricing and Warranty Policies Özcan Mutlu, 1999 Dynamic Pricing Strategies for New Products with Extended Warranty Contracts Shengqiu Zhang, 2017-01-27 This dissertation Dynamic Pricing Strategies for New Products With Extended Warranty Contracts by Shengqiu Zhang was obtained from The University of Hong Kong Pokfulam Hong Kong and is being sold pursuant to Creative Commons Attribution 3.0 Hong Kong License The content of this dissertation has not been altered in any way We have altered the formatting in order to facilitate the ease of printing and reading of the dissertation All rights not granted by the above license are retained by the author

Abstract An extended warranty provides consumers the opportunity to rectify product failures at little or no cost after the expiry of the base warranty Empirical evidence has shown that the selling of extended warranty contract EWC has become a profitable business in many manufacturing and retail industries This thesis investigates the dynamic pricing problem for a new product with the option of purchasing an extended warranty contract EWC The research simultaneously determines the pricing strategies for both the product and the associated EWC and the production rate to maximize the manufacturer's long term total profit The results show that the provision of EWC will significantly affect the optimal pricing strategy for the new product and may also affect its optimal production plan The research establishes three mathematical models for making optimal pricing decisions under different operational settings The first model considers a centralized selling system in which the manufacturer sells the product and offers the associated EWC to the consumer directly The second model extends the first one by incorporating the production and inventory decisions in the analysis The third model considers a decentralized system in which the manufacturer sells the new product to consumers through an independent retailer The EWC can be offered either by the manufacturer or by the retailer It is shown that each scenario leads to a differential Stackelberg game in which the manufacturer and the retailer are players For the first model the Pontryagin maximum principle is used to derive the necessary condition for the optimal pricing strategies for both the new product and the associated EWC Some properties for pricing the new product optimally are then studied Apart from analysing the characteristics of the optimal pricing strategy under general demand conditions closed form solutions for the problem are also derived for some specific demand functions In cases where closed form solutions cannot be found a gradient algorithm is applied to solve the problem numerically In the second model the production rate becomes a decision variable because the unit production cost depends on the chosen production rate Results of the analysis show that the optimal selling price for the EWC remains the same as that in the first model while the optimal selling price for the new product are affected by the production rate The results also show that the gradient algorithm fails to converge thus is no longer suitable for the second model due to the complexity caused by the boundary conditions A more robust control vector parameterization method is then developed to compute the numerical solution Analysing the third model theoretically indicates that some necessary conditions related to the optimal wholesale price and the optimal retail price must be satisfied for the existence of an open loop Stackelberg equilibrium Some important managerial insights are derived on the basis of the properties characterizing the optimal solution The control vector parameterization method is then further developed to solve the differential game problem Numerical experiments are then carried out to demonstrate which distribution channel results in the largest profit DOI 10 5353 th_b5435661 Subjects

Warranty Pricing Dynamic Pricing Strategies for New Products with Extended Warranty Contracts □□□, University of Hong Kong, 2015 Cyclicity of Add-on Pricing Branko Boskovic, Sacha Kapoor, Agnieszka Markiewicz, Barry

Scholnick, 2020 What explains apparent price rigidity over the business cycle This paper shows that price fluctuations may be hidden in prices of add ons Using 10 years of extended warranty data from a nationwide Canadian retailer we show that extended warranty prices respond strongly to changes in local economic activity whereas prices of underlying durable goods do not The procyclicality is driven by a shift in price setting behavior where local stores use extended warranty discounts to make base durable demand less price elastic and as a result increase sales of durable goods Discounts on extended warranties were especially sharp during the Great Recession Reducing Warranty Costs Through Total Customer

Multiproduct Pricing Management and Design of New Service Products Ruxian Wang,2012 This makes traditional warranties economically unattractive to low usage customers In this chapter we introduce design and price residual value warranties These warranties refund a part of the upfront price to customers who have zero or few claims according to a pre determined refund schedule By design the net cost of these warranties is lower for light users than for heavy users As a result a residual value warranty can enable the provider to price discriminate based on usage rates or operating conditions without the need to monitor individual customers usage Theoretic results and numerical experiments demonstrate how residual value warranties can appeal to a broader range of customers and significantly increase the provider s profits
