Abstract The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised walking program on the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women. The study was a randomized, controlled trial. The subjects were 40 sedentary, middle-aged women who were randomly assigned to either a supervised walking program or a control group. The walking program consisted of 12 weeks of supervised walking, 3 times per week, for 30 minutes per session. The control group consisted of 20 women who did not participate in the walking program. The subjects were assessed at baseline and at 12 weeks. The walking program had a significant positive effect on the physical and psychological health of the subjects. The walking program significantly improved the subjects' physical health, as measured by the 6-minute walk test, and their psychological health, as measured by the Beck Depression Inventory and the State-Trait Anxiety Inventory. The walking program also had a significant positive effect on the subjects' quality of life, as measured by the SF-36. The walking program was a safe and effective intervention for improving the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women.

Abstract. In a series of experiments, we examined the effects of the type of feedback (i.e., correct or incorrect) and the type of question (i.e., multiple choice or open ended) on the accuracy of responses. The results showed that the type of feedback had a significant effect on the accuracy of responses, with correct feedback leading to higher accuracy than incorrect feedback. The type of question also had a significant effect on the accuracy of responses, with open ended questions leading to higher accuracy than multiple choice questions. The interaction between the type of feedback and the type of question was also significant, with correct feedback leading to higher accuracy than incorrect feedback for open ended questions, but not for multiple choice questions.
