Rapid Prototyping Patri K.

Venuvinod, Weiyin Ma, 2013-04-17 Since the dawn of civilization mankind has been engaged in the conception and manufacture of discrete products to serve the functional needs of local customers and the tools technology needed by other craftsmen In fact much of the progress in civilization can be attributed to progress in discrete product manufacture The functionality of a discrete object depends on two entities form and material composition For instance the aesthetic appearance of a sculpture depends upon its form whereas its durability depends upon the material composition An ideal manufacturing process is one that is able to automatically generate any form freeform in any material However unfortunately most traditional manufacturing processes are severely constrained on all these counts There are three basic ways of creating form conservative subtractive and additive In the first approach we take a material and apply the needed forces to deform it to the required shape without either adding or removing material i.e. we conserve material. Many industrial processes such as forging, casting, sheet metal forming and extrusion emulate this approach. A problem with many of these approaches is that they focus on form generation without explicitly providing any means for controlling material composition. In fact, even form is not created directly. They merely duplicate the external form embedded in external tooling such as dies and molds and the internal form embedded in cores etc. Till recently we have had to resort to the subtractive approach to create the form of the tooling.

Structure-Property Relationships of Polymeric Solids Anne Hiltner, 2012-12-06 This book contains a collection of original research papers which were presented in honor of the Bordon Award recipient Professor Eric Baer on the occasion of the 55th Meeting of the American Chemical Society Atlanta Georgia March 1981. The contributors are present or former colleagues and students who have worked with him in the Department of Macromolecular Science at Case Institute of Technology of Case Western Reserve University. Throughout his work Eric Baer has attempted to find the relationships of solid state structure and hierarchy to the resultant properties from which specific functions are derived. Although he has studied many seemingly unrelated subjects from irreversible deformation mechanics and yield processes in amorphous polymeric solids to structural organization and mechanical function of tendon his unique goal has been to develop models from the real structure that would allow a quantitative description of properties. Today this area of microscience is rapidly expanding as new and sophisticated applications of polymeric materials with multifunctional properties are emerging from our understanding and control of the solid state. The wide ranging ideas and the originality of Professor Baer's contributions have stimulated many new concepts which are now widely accepted in the field of high polymers. The contributions to this volume represent many of the areas which he has explored.
