

Rationale

This text is based on Part 4: Critical Analysis - of the course, which involved me reading a lot of poetry and literature texts. I decided to make a dramatic monologue based on the style of Carol Ann Duffy in her collection named 'The World's Wife', with the intention of analyzing the way Duffy depicts women in literature by giving them a voice. By doing this, Duffy gives original tales and myths, such as Medusa and Little Red Riding Hood, a new perspective as the tales are told from the female characters viewpoint.

In this text I explore the fairytale of Cinderella from her perspective as well as in a modern context. I chose to look at Cinderella's perspective as in the original tale, although she has a happy ending, she is mistreated throughout and does not get a chance to stand up for herself.

In this monologue Cinderella is a teenage girl who comes from a wealthy family and has become accustomed to living a materialistic life, however this privilege is stripped away from her when her stepmother and stepsisters are introduced to the family. This monologue explores the importance of money and things in today's society.

I used Duffy's range of poetic and stylistic devices such as inconsistent rhyme, idioms and metaphors to create a powerful dramatic monologue that would appropriately interpret the thoughts of a selfless girl who asked nothing of anyone, but had grand desires, yet was forced to become a servant to her stepmother and stepsisters.

Cinderella

Stay good and God will protect,
Like a guardian angel I'll watch over

Her last words, before shutting her eyes and letting go
Now she's gone, and I'm alone
Crying at her grave, struggling to stop.

Autumn goes by. Nothing.
Winter goes by. Nothing.
Spring. She's here.
Who, you ask? My new 'mother'

A darkened new era
Is slowly creeping in.
Where do they feature?
Knees deep in riches.
Me? Drowning in burdens.

Maliciousness, not blatantly clear,
At first.
But their hearts, made of stone,
Their lungs, blacker than coal,
Colder than the ice on the Northern Sea.
