General Layout

During the Inter-War period several navies appreciated the need for better dedicated minelayers that were both better than converted types and which would allow Destroyers and other warships to performed their duties.

Most major navies had dedicated minelayers, but only in the Royal Navy did they materialize into an effective force of six ships, five of which were the Abdjel class described here. Their primary weapon was of course the seamine which is depicted in the next slide, therefore the weapons described above were in reality defensive and intended to protect the lightly-armoured ships' deadly payloads.
