

Performing Pedagogy

Creative Engagement and Collaborative Learning

Katya Wesolowski, Cultural Anthropology

Course Objectives

Exploring performance as both a critical lens onto the politics of representation in Brazil and as a way for students to experience producing and sharing knowledge in collaborative, embodied ways.

Course Work

A mix of studio and seminar classes and a progression of projects (see display below) allow students to experience a diversity of learning and assessment styles.

"This is the first anthropology class I have ever taken, and it fulfillingly deepened my knowledge about Brazil and taught me the appropriate ways in which we should study other cultures, not objectifying them, infantilizing them, or speaking for them, but listening to them. And it has taught me that dance is a valuable communication form, at times even more valuable than text."

Course Outcomes

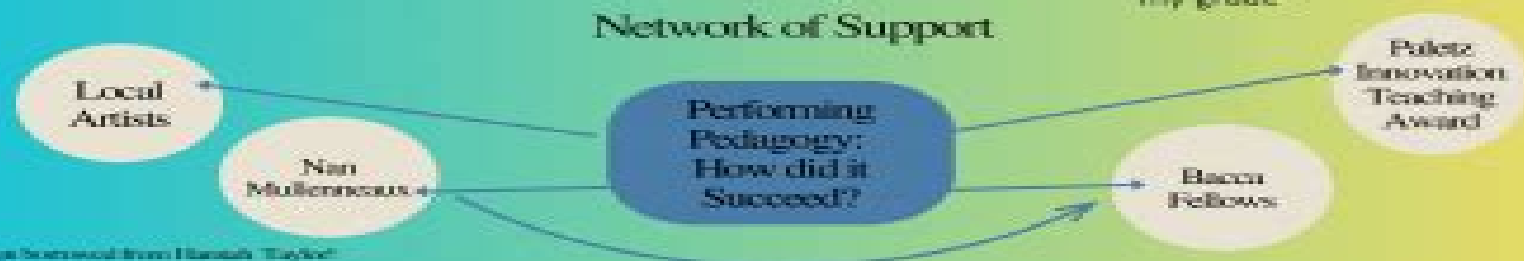

Students demonstrated engagement with the course materials and with each other and were willing to push themselves past their comfort zone in exploring unfamiliar course design, objectives and expectations.

"I learned how to integrate several forms of performance arts to explain concepts. I learned how to collaborate effectively with others, and how to read and integrate multiple sources."

"I liked how all of the projects were different: one essay, one video dance, Carnaval artistic piece, and more. It allowed me to enjoy learning about Afro-Brazilian culture in a context beyond just reading. I appreciated the ungraded aspect of the course, for I found myself feeling more motivated to take risks in my work and go out of my comfort zone, without the fear of it negatively affecting my grade"
