Public Policies and Private Savings and Investment in Sub-Saharan Africa Mr. Dhaneshwar

Ghura, Mr. Michael T. Hadjimichael, 1995-02-01 This paper assesses empirically the role of public policies in stimulating private savings and investment in sub Saharan African countries based on data for the period 1986-92. The main findings of the analysis are as follows: i) policies effective in stimulating private savings and investment include those that keep the rate of inflation low, reduce macroeconomic uncertainty, promote financial deepening, and lower the external debt burden; ii) measures that promote structural reforms and reduce the budget deficit without lowering government investment help to raise private investment; and iii) declines in government savings are only partially offset by increases in private savings.

Inflation and adverse movements in the terms of trade are found to be two additional factors with depressing effects on the propensity to save. The paper also finds evidence in favor of the error correction formulation under which the savings rate varies procyclically in the short run but remains constant in the steady state.
