Industries, Firms, and Jobs George Farkas, Paula England, 1988-07-31 This book is a welcome reassertion of an old tradition of interdisciplinary research That tradition has tended to atrophy in the last decade largely because of an enormous expansion of the domain of neoclassical economics The expansion has fed on two scientific developments first human capital theory second contract theory Both developments have taken phenomena critical to the operation of the economy but previously understood in terms of categories separate and distinct from those with which economists generally work and sought to apply the same analytical techniques that we use to understand other economic problems Human capital theory has applied conventional techniques to questions of labor supply It began this endeavor with the supply of trained labor and then expanded to a general theory of labor supply by broadening the analysis to the allocation of time over the individual's life the interdependencies of supply decisions within the family and finally to the formation of the family itself Similarly contract theory has moved from a theory that explains the existence of closed economic institutions to a theory of their formation and internal operation The hallmark of both of these developments is the extension and application of analytical techniques based on purposive maximization under constraints and the interaction of individual decision makers through a competitive market or its analogue
