Golden-winged Warbler Ecology, Conservation, and Habitat Management Henry M. Streby, David E. Andersen, David Buehler, 2016-10-26 Golden winged Warblers Vermivora chrysoptera are migratory songbirds that breed in temperate North America primarily in the Great Lakes region with remnant populations throughout the Appalachian Mountains and winter in Central and northern South America Their breeding range has contracted dramatically in the Appalachian Mountains and many populations have dramatically declined likely due to habitat loss competition and interbreeding with Blue winged Warblers Vermivora pinus and global climate change As a result of population declines in much of the eastern portion of their breeding range Golden winged Warblers are listed as endangered or threatened in 10 U S states and in Canada and have been petitioned for protection under the U S Endangered Species Act Published in collaboration with and on behalf of The American Ornithological Society this volume in the highly regarded Studies in Avian Biology series compiles extensive current research on Golden winged Warblers and summarizes what is known and identifies many remaining unknowns providing a wealth of peer reviewed science on which future research and listing decisions can be based Chequamegon-Nicolet National Forest (N.F.), Twin Ghost Project ,2010 Natural forests for a safe climate: Enhancing ecosystem integrity, biodiversity and adaptive capacity for climate mitigation Alfredo Di Filippo, Brendan George Mackey, William R. This decline is related in part to habitat loss and degradation of contemporary forests; however, the consequences of anthropogenic disturbance on the species need further evaluation. Thus, I assessed occupancy, population growth, mating behaviors, and hybrid habitat use by Golden winged Warblers across a range of disturbance levels within southeast Manitoba, Canada. Golden winged Warblers consistently responded most strongly to disturbance at the 1 km scale. Forest patches with greater agricultural matrix cover at a 1 km scale were less likely to be occupied by Golden winged Warblers. However, warblers did select for early successional habitat created via resource extraction and other anthropogenic disturbances at this scale. Despite higher densities, productivity declined in landscapes with greater edge density because of Brown headed Cowbird Molothrus ater brood parasitism. Additionally, pairing success was reduced in patches with lower forest cover at a 1 km scale, although extra pair paternity rates were not impacted by patch or landscape characteristics. These results suggest that proximate habitat cues used to select nesting sites may be decoupled from realized fitness in this system. Of the sub populations I monitored, all showed negative population growth, suggesting that anthropogenically disturbed forests may act as ecological traps for Golden winged Warblers. The most productive habitat for Golden winged Warbler will have high forest cover and minimal anthropogenic edges. Hybridization with Blue winged Warblers Vermivora cyanoptera has also been suggested as a reason for population declines range wide, and I found that hybridization is now occurring in low levels in the Manitoba population. I found no difference in the habitat used by Golden winged Warblers compared with hybrids at either a territory or landscape scale. The low proportion of hybrids found in Manitoba and the lack of a distinguishable difference in habitat use by Golden winged Warblers and hybrids indicates that management efforts to encourage habitat use by Golden winged Warblers while discouraging habitat use by Blue winged Warbler are unlikely to be a successful conservation strategy. Instead, management efforts should focus on maintaining or creating early successional habitats with minimal anthropogenic edges. Comparative Ecology of the
