False Memories: How Our Minds Create Misinformation

Introduction to False Memories

False memories are recollections of events that didn't happen or that happened differently than how we remember them. Research shows that our memories aren't like photographs; instead, they're like a collage of information. Our brains fill in gaps, sometimes creating false details. This can happen when we're influenced by others, especially when we're exposed to misinformation or suggestibility.

How Memory Distortion Happens

Memory distortion occurs when our recall of an event is influenced by factors like suggestion, external information, or our own expectations. For instance, if someone suggests that you were wearing a blue shirt on your last birthday, you might start to believe this story, even if you were actually wearing a red one. This effect is known as suggestibility, where our memory can be shaped by external cues.

Another factor is the power of questions. When you're asked a question, your brain might fill in gaps with information. For example, if you're asked "How many times did you go to the store on your last birthday?" you might start to remember going more often than you actually did. This is because the question itself can influence your memory.

The Misinformation Effect

The Misinformation Effect is a psychological phenomenon where exposure to
