reduced surface darkening oxidative browning and tissue softening The calcium salts presumably contributed to structure formation and enhanced the fruit texture The usefulness of sodium alginate calcium chloride edible coating was also tested for improving the quality and reducing the drip loss of dehydro frozen pineapple cut fruits A continuous medium flow microwave assisted osmotic dehydration under spray condition MWODS technique was first used to partially dehydrate the pineapple cut fruits MWODS was carried for 10 min at 40 °C using a 40 °Brix sucrose solution The MWODS semi dried cut fruits were then alginate coated and frozen stored at 20 °C for 10 and 50 days The frozen stored coated cut fruits had a significant reduction in drip loss and improved quality parameters such as appearance color and texture which are normally associated with tissue softening and discoloration as a result of freezing
