Abstract: The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week training program on the physical fitness of middle-aged women. The study was conducted in a laboratory setting. The participants were 20 middle-aged women (mean age 45.5 years, range 40-55 years) who were divided into two groups: a control group (n=10) and an exercise group (n=10). The exercise group performed a 12-week training program consisting of three sessions per week, each lasting 30 minutes. The training program included aerobic exercise, strength training, and flexibility exercises. The control group did not participate in any training program. The physical fitness of the participants was measured at the beginning and end of the 12-week period. The measurements included maximum heart rate, maximum oxygen consumption (VO2max), and maximum power output (Wmax). The results showed that the exercise group had significantly higher values for all three measurements at the end of the 12-week period compared to the control group. The control group had no significant changes in any of the measurements. The results suggest that a 12-week training program can improve the physical fitness of middle-aged women.
