

RL.6.6 Analyze how differences in the point of view of the characters and the audience or reader (created through the use of dramatic irony) create such effects as suspense or humor.

Key Term	Definition	Example
Narrator	Person telling the story
Dramatic irony	The audience knows something the characters do not. Because of this understanding, the words of the characters take on a different meaning. Audience uses this to create effects: suspense or humor	In a story, maybe, the character walks into a house and the audience knows the killer is in the house.

Type of POV	Why the author uses it	Definition	Clue
First Person	Shows the reader right in into, another thoughts.	Narrator tells the story	Uses "I"
Second Person	Draws the reader into the story by talking directly to them	Narrator speaks directly to you	Uses "You"
Third Person	Gives the reader a third objective view	An outside narrator tells the story	Uses "he" "she" "it"
Third Person Limited	Gives the readers a direct, intense view of a character's thoughts and feelings.	An outside narrator tells the story BUT knows the thoughts of one character	Still Uses "he" "she" "it" but tells the story through one character's eyes
Third Person Omniscient	Allows the read to know all of the thoughts of all characters	An outside narrator tells the story and knows the thoughts of all characters	Still uses "he" "she" "it" but is able to tell the story from all points of view.

Notes:

Authors use points of view to reveal thoughts, feelings, actions, and spoken words.
Be able to contrast the points of view of different characters or narrators in a text.

Know that the points of view of characters and reader can be different. This is all dependent on what the narrator/author lets the reader know.
