

SCHEMATA (PLURAL OF SCHEMA)

mental frameworks that help individuals organise, interpret, and process information based on prior knowledge and experiences.

The child processes time and memory through familiar structures, rather than numerical or abstract concepts.

USE OF FAMILIAR STORYTELLING CONVENTIONS

The phrase "Once upon a schooltime" activates a storytelling schema, as it mirrors the classic fairy tale opening "Once upon a time".

This signals to the reader that the child is experiencing school not as a structured system, but through the lens of a narrative, showing how children often process events by framing them within familiar story-like structures.

COMPOUND NOUNS

The compound words suggest that the child does not think of time in measured hours and minutes, but rather in relation to what happens next in their daily routine.

Instead of saying "7:00 AM" or "bedtime at 8 PM," the child experiences time in landmarks of the day, like waking up ("Gettinguptime") or receiving affection ("Timeformykisstime").

This highlights the contrast between the adult's rigid, numerical concept of time and the child's fluid, experience-based perception of it.

"Gettinguptime"
"Timeformykisstime"
"Tvtime"

CAPITALISATION

The phrase "Something Very Wrong" is presented with capitalisation, reinforcing how the child categorises punishment as a structured, significant event without fully understanding the reason behind it.

This highlights how children organise their experiences using simplified, rigid categories, often shaped by adult authority figures.

The use of these words suggests that the child is still developing their understanding of the world, relying on comforting, familiar markers of time rather than abstract numbers.

The phrase "Timeformykisstime" particularly stands out, as it implies that the child associates time with love and security, rather than discipline and structure.

This reinforces the theme of childhood innocence, showing how a child's world is based on relationships and emotions rather than rigid systems.
