PALAEOPATHOLOGY OF ABORIGINAL AUSTRALIANS. HEALTH AND DISEASE ACROSS A HUNTER-GATHERER CONTINENT

Stephen Webb, Cambridge University Press, Cambridge, 1995. Price US $59.95. ISBN 0-521-48064-1 (Hardback)

Stephen Webb's new book joins the growing number of regional and temporal surveys of biological anthropology and palaeopathology. Primarily using health and disease data obtained from his many studies of late Pleistocene and Holocene (pre-Contact) human remains from Australia, Webb has written an informative and synthetic presentation. Where available, he has supplemented his data with appropriate ethnohistoric sources and accounts, as well as with comparative work in biological anthropology.

After presenting basic information on materials and methods (Chapters 1 and 2), Webb discusses the Upper Pleistocene and Holocene human settlement of Australia, and the pathology identified in associated skeletal remains, dating to between 50 000 and 8000 years BP (Chapters 3 and 4). Following this introductory section, Webb devotes a chapter each to descriptions and assessments of stress indicators (e.g., crania orbitalia), infectious disease, osteoarthritis, trauma, neoplasms, and congenital malformations (Chapters 5 through to 10 inclusive). The penultimate chapter presents Webb's recent study of a pre-Contact skeletal population recovered from a Papuan (New Guinea) site, and the final chapter draws on the previously discussed palaeopathological evidence in presenting regional differences and similarities in pre-Contact health and disease among Australian Aboriginal peoples.

Webb succeeds at presenting both data and syntheses. In each chapter, he provides case studies and an inter-regional comparison as well as a general summary of findings. With supporting data on frequencies contained in numerous detailed tables, the book should be of use to other scholars. There are, however, a number of sections where speculative reasoning, informed only minimally by palaeopathological evidence, comprises the text. Although this is perhaps unavoidable, particularly when trying to make sense of health and disease patterns of the late Pleistocene populations (Chapter 3), the few palaeopathology cases from late Pleistocene remains presented in Chapter 4 provide better and more interesting bases for interpreting the past. At times, in Chapters 5 through to 10, an unusual case study presentation overwhelms the tabular data on intra- and interpopulation incidences.

The palaeopathological evidence and differential diagnoses are generally presented in a clear and consistent manner. Most of the photographs clearly show the specimens, although some are presented in unusual orientations. Nonetheless, the combination of text, tabular data, and photographs generally provide sufficient evidence for knowledgeable readers to come to their own conclusions. The diagnoses offered for observed pathological changes usually fit the skeletal and/or dental evidence provided. In one instance, however, the unusual diaphyseal bowing in one of the Willandra Lakes specimens is more likely to be a normal variant than a pathology. For example, Philip Houghton, in his book The First New Zealanders (1980), describes bowing of the ulnar shaft as a normal anatomical finding in many Polynesian remains.

Chapter 8, 'Trauma', contains a short section on probable and possible cases of surgery found in Aboriginal remains. Webb describes several instances of trephination, and two cases of probable amputation of limbs. At least one of the trephination cases is ambiguous, as Webb points out, the available evidence supporting differential diagnoses of trauma followed by infection or (possibly multiple) trephination.

There was an occasional inconsistency in the tables summarizing incidences of pathological conditions. Table 5.5, for example, documents the frequency of Harris lines in skeletal remains sorted by geographical area, but sample sizes are conspicuously absent. In other places, minor distractions occur in the form of textual references missing from the bibliography, or small errors of fact or interpretation. For example, on page 191, the relatively sedentary Late Woodland population represented in the Libben Site ossuary (studied by Lovejoy et al., 1977) are described as 'hunter-gatherers' and compared with nomadic desert

Palaeopathology Of Aboriginal Australians Health And Disease Across A Hunter Gatherer Continent:

Palaeopathology of Aboriginal Australians Stephen Webb, 1995-04-28 Using data collected from all parts of the continent this book is a study of the health of Australia's original inhabitants over 50 000 years. It represents the first continental survey of its kind and is the first to quantify and describe important aspects of Australian hunter gatherer health. Major categories of disease described are stress osteoarthritis, fractures, congenital deformations, neoplasms, and non-specific and treponemal infections. The author also describes some surgical techniques used by Aboriginal people. A broad ranging book offering fresh insight into the study of Australian prehistory and Aboriginal culture, the book also illuminates the origins and ecology of human disease.

Continent of Hunter-Gatherers Harry Lourandos, 1997-02-28 This book challenges traditional perceptions of Australian Aboriginal prehistory that the environment is the major determinant of hunter gatherers, that Aborigines were egalitarian and culturally homogeneous and therefore experienced few economic and demographic changes. Harry Lourandos argues that the social and economic processes of hunter gatherers were complex and that the prehistoric period was dynamic and revolutionary. Lourandos presents prehistoric data, reviews archaeological and ethnohistorical evidence, and analyses environmental, demographic, and socially oriented perspectives, drawing from them an original hypothesis. He addresses initial colonisation, the role of Tasmanian Aborigines, the role of fire, faunal extinctions, the intensification debate, horticultural origins, plant exploitation, and the significance of Australian prehistory in the study of other prehistoric hunter gatherer societies.

The Social Archaeology of Australian Indigenous Societies Bruno David, Bryce Barker, Ian J. McNiven, 2006 The Social Archaeology of Indigenous Societies presents original and provocative views on the complex and dynamic social lives of Indigenous Australians from an historical perspective. Building on the foundational work of Harry Lourandos, the book critically examines and challenges traditional approaches which have presented Indigenous Australian past as static and tethered to ecological rationalism. The book reveals the ancient past of Aboriginal Australians to be one of long term changes in social relationships and traditions, as well as the active management and manipulation of the environment. The book encourages a deeper appreciation of the ways Aboriginal peoples have engaged with and constructed their worlds. It solicits a deeper understanding of the contemporary political and social context of research and the insidious impacts of colonialist philosophies. In short, it concerns people both past and present. The Social Archaeology of Indigenous Societies looks beyond the stereo.

The Politics of Suffering Peter Sutton, 2009 Peter Sutton is a fearless and authoritative voice in Aboriginal politics. In this groundbreaking book, he asks why, after three decades of liberal thinking, has the suffering and grief in so many Aboriginal communities become worse? The picture Sutton presents is tragic. He marshals shocking evidence against the failures of the past and argues provocatively that three decades of liberal consensus on Aboriginal issues has collapsed. Sutton is a leading Australian anthropologist who has lived and worked closely with Aboriginal communities. He combines clear-eyed original observation with deep emotional engagement. The Politics of Suffering cuts through the cant and offers fresh insight and hope for a new era in Indigenous politics Handbook of Landscape Archaeology Bruno David, Julian Thomas, 2016-06-03 Over 80 archaeologists from four continents create a benchmark volume of the ideas and practices of landscape archaeology covering the theoretical and the practical the research and conservation and encasing the term in a global framework Media, Culture and Human Violence Jeff Lewis, 2015-11-18 Humans of the advanced world are the most violent beings of all times This violence is evident in the conditions of perpetual warfare and the accumulation of the most powerful and destructive arsenal ever known to humankind It is also evident in the devastating impact of advanced world economy and cultural practices which have led to ecological devastation and the current era of mass species extinction one of only six mass extinction events in planetary history and the only one caused by the actions of a single species humans This violence is manifest in our interpersonal relationships and the ways in which we organize ourselves through hierarchical systems that ensure the wealth and privilege of some against the penury and misery of others In this new and highly original book Jeff Lewis argues that violence is deeply inscribed in human culture thinking and expressive systems media Lewis contends that violence is not an inescapable feature of an aggressive human nature Rather violence is laced through our desires and dispositions to communalism and expressive interaction From the near extinction of all Homo sapiens around 74 000 years ago the invention of culture and media enabled humans to imagine and articulate particular choices and pleasures Organized intergroup violence or warfare emerged through the exercise of these choices and their expression through larger and increasingly complex human societies This agitation of amplified desire hierarchical social organization and mediated knowledge systems has created a cultural volition of violent complexity which continues into the present Media Culture and Human Violence examines the current conditions of conflict and harm as an expression of our violent complexity The Archaeology of the Aru Islands, Eastern Indonesia Sue O'Connor, Matthew Spriggs, Peter Marius Veth, 2005 This volume describes the results of the first archaeological survey and excavations carried out in the fascinating and remote Aru Islands Eastern Indonesia between 1995 and 1997 The naturalist Alfred Russel Wallace who stopped here in search of the Birds of Paradise on his voyage through the Indo Malay Archipelago in the 1850s was the first to draw attention to the group The results reveal a complex and fascinating history covering the last 30 000 years from its early settlement by hunter gatherers the late Holocene arrival of ceramic producing agriculturalists later associations with the Bird of Paradise trade and the colonial expansion of the Dutch trading empires The excavations and finds from two large Pleistocene caves Liang Lemdubu and Nabulei Lisa are reported in detail documenting the changing environmental and cultural history of the islands from when they were connected to Greater Australia and used by hunter gatherers to their formation as islands and use by agriculturalists The results of the excavation of the late Neolithic Metal Age midden at Wangil are discussed as is the mysterious pre Colonial fort at Ujir and the 350 year old ruins of forts and a church associated with the Dutch garrisons Book jacket CURRENT CONTENTS ,1997 The Florida
