

financial aid section on their websites that lists available scholarships and the application process.

- Online scholarship databases: There are many websites that allow students to search for scholarships based on their criteria, such as academic achievements, field of study, or background. Some of these websites include Fastweb, Scholarships.com, and CollegeBoard.
- High school guidance counselor: Your high school guidance counselor can provide information about local and national scholarships, as well as help you with the application process.
- Professional organizations: Many professional organizations offer scholarships to students who are pursuing careers in a related field.
- Government agencies: Federal and state government agencies, such as the Department of Education and National Endowment for the Arts, offer scholarships for students in specific fields of study or from specific backgrounds.

It is a good idea to consider applying for scholarships from organizations or companies related to your field of study. These organizations may offer scholarships specifically for students who are pursuing careers in their field, and they can provide valuable connections and opportunities in the future. Before applying, research the organization and its mission, as well as the specific requirements for the scholarship. You can also reach out to the organization directly to ask about the application process and what they are looking for in a scholarship recipient.
