

GENDER DIFFERENCES IN MATH ANXIETY

Materials and Methods

The study was conducted using a survey method. The survey was distributed to a group of students in a classroom setting. The survey consisted of a series of questions designed to measure math anxiety levels. The survey was completed by 50 students, with 25 males and 25 females. The data was then analyzed using statistical methods to determine if there were any significant differences in math anxiety levels between the two groups.

Results

The results of the study showed that there were significant differences in math anxiety levels between males and females. Females scored significantly higher on the math anxiety scale than males. This suggests that females experience higher levels of math anxiety than males. The results also showed that the majority of students in both groups reported low to medium levels of math anxiety.

Hypothesis

It was hypothesized that females would score higher on the math anxiety scale than males. This was based on previous research that has shown that females tend to experience higher levels of math anxiety than males.

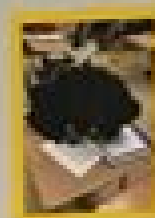

Conclusion

The study concluded that there were significant differences in math anxiety levels between males and females. Females scored significantly higher on the math anxiety scale than males. This suggests that females experience higher levels of math anxiety than males. The results also showed that the majority of students in both groups reported low to medium levels of math anxiety.

Abstract

This study investigated the relationship between gender and math anxiety. The results showed that females scored significantly higher on the math anxiety scale than males. This suggests that females experience higher levels of math anxiety than males. The results also showed that the majority of students in both groups reported low to medium levels of math anxiety.

Purpose

The purpose of this study was to investigate the relationship between gender and math anxiety. The study aimed to determine if there were any significant differences in math anxiety levels between males and females.
