

Performing Pedagogy

Creative Engagement and Collaborative Learning

Katya Wesolowski, Cultural Anthropology

Course Objectives

Exploring performance as both a critical lens onto the politics of representation in Brazil and as a way for students to experience producing and sharing knowledge in collaborative, embodied ways

Course Work

A mix of studio and seminar classes and a progression of projects (see display below) allow students to experience a diversity of learning and assessment styles.

"This is the first anthropology class I have ever taken, and it fulfillingly deepened my knowledge about Brazil and taught me the appropriate ways in which we should study other cultures, not objectifying them, infantilizing them, or speaking for them, but listening to them. And it has taught me that dance is a valuable communication form, at times even more valuable than text."

Course Outcomes

Students demonstrated engagement with the course materials and with each other and were willing to push themselves past their comfort zone in exploring unfamiliar course design, objectives and expectations.

"I learned how to integrate several forms of performance arts to explain concepts. I learned how to collaborate effectively with others, and how to read and integrate multiple sources."

"I liked how all of the projects were different: one essay, one video dance, Carnaval artistic piece, and more. It allowed me to enjoy learning about Afro-Brazilian culture in a context beyond just reading. I appreciated the ungraded aspect of the course, for I found myself feeling more motivated to take risks in my work and go out of my comfort zone, without the fear of it negatively affecting my grade"

Hooper-Greenhill, 2007-12-12 At the beginning of the 21st century museums are challenged on a number of fronts The prioritisation of learning in museums in the context of demands for social justice and cultural democracy combined with cultural policy based on economic rationalism forces museums to review their educational purposes redesign their pedagogies and account for their performance The need to theorise learning and culture for a cultural theory of learning is very pressing If culture acts as a process of signification a means of producing meaning that shapes worldviews learning in museums and other cultural organisations is potentially dynamic and profound producing self identities How is this complexity to be measured What can this measurement reveal about the character of museum based learning The calibration of culture is an international phenomenon and the measurement of the outcomes and impact of learning in museums in England has provided a detailed case study Three national evaluation studies were carried out between 2003 and 2006 based on the conceptual framework of Generic Learning Outcomes Using this revealing data Museums and Education reveals the power of museum pedagogy and as it does questions are raised about traditional museum culture and the potential and challenge for museum futures is suggested

Musical Performance Daniel L. Kohut, 1985 Performance Art as Critical Pedagogy Renee Kredell, 2009 ABSTRACT This is an ethnographic study investigating how performance art used as a pedagogical methodology can create an educational space that is transformative causing reflection both personal and institutional The dissertation aligns performance art pedagogy with critical pedagogy investigating how it creates transformation and reflection for involved participants It defines the parameters of an educational performance within a performance art pedagogical space clarifying the terms unsettled space unsettled content liminal and performantivity as they relate to the functioning model of performance art pedagogy The researcher used an Arts based inquiry methodology entering the site as an artist teacher research The philosophical frame aligns itself with radical pedagogical theory that believes education is not a place for the reinscription of knowledge but a place for individual engagement where personal narratives are in concert with ideas past present future in relation to current culture The overall purpose of the work is to assist teachers in comprehending the foundational theory and supporting pillars of a performance art pedagogical space to assist educators in implementing similar strategies within their own classrooms Research Introduction The researcher was invited to a central Pennsylvania high school to introduce performance art to a group of 24 advanced studio art students for 1 hour a day for 15 days The in service consisted of 4 introductory workshops on movement pathways sound tableaux and Happenings followed by additional studio days culminating in three performance art pieces that were performed for the school Post in service the researcher interviewed 6 participants 1 non participating student 2 participating students 2 teachers and 2 administrators who were asked the following questions What are the benefits of performance work in the classroom what are the difficulties How do you feel the performances enriched you the students attending the teachers the school administrators and the institution For example increasing the discussion between students about topics not normally discussed What were your ah ha moments whether pro or con during your involvement in this project Please consider these three areas of reflection personal curricular what was being taught and pedagogical how it was being taught The interviewees responses were then analyzed by using the following questions as filters What elements are present in a performance based pedagogy that distinguish it as a form of critical pedagogy What aspects of a performed pedagogy open up dialogical arenas both personal and institutional What constitutes an educational performance What assists in the promotion of reflexivity Research Outcome Through the analysis of the data a visual model emerged that highlights how the pedagogy forms a variety of non static relationships that promote performative engagements toward transformation both personal and institutional The secondary finding is the transparent nature of performance art pedagogy both in use of media and method which lays a foundation for the possibility of reflexivity by participants and audience members The co opting of the artography methodology is also applied to the student within this work showing how an additional layer of reflexivity can occur due to the student s engagement as an artist teacher and researcher within the pedagogy

Teaching Performance: A Philosophy of Piano Pedagogy Jeffrey Swinkin, 2015-07-16 How can the studio teacher teach a lesson so as to instill refined artistic sensibilities ones often thought to elude language How can the applied lesson be a form of aesthetic education How can teaching performance be an artistic endeavor in its own right These are some of the questions Teaching Performance attempts to answer drawing on the author s several decades of experience as a studio teacher and music scholar The architects of absolute music Hanslick Schopenhauer and others held that it is precisely because instrumental music lacks language and thus any overt connection to the non musical world that it is able to expose essential elements of that world More particularly for these philosophers it is the density of musical structure the intricate interplay among purely musical elements that allows music to capture the essences behind appearances By analogy the author contends that the more structurally intricate and aesthetically nuanced a pedagogical system is the greater its ability to illuminate music and facilitate musical skills The author terms this phenomenon relational autonomy Eight chapters unfold a piano pedagogical system pivoting on the principle of relational autonomy In grounding piano pedagogy in the aesthetics of absolute music each domain works on the other On the one hand Romantic aesthetics affords pedagogy a source of artistic value in its own right On the other hand pedagogy concretizes Romantic aesthetics deflating its transcendental pretensions and showing the dichotomy of absolute utilitarian to be specious
