

People, Places and Things

EMMA

With a play you get instructions. Stage directions. Dialogue. Someone clothes you. Tells you where to be and when. You get to live the most intense moments of a life over and over again, with all the boring bits left out. And you get to practise. For weeks. And you're applauded. Then you get home. Back to real life. Waiting. Temping. Nothing permanent. Can't plan. Audition comes in. try to look right. Sit in a room surrounded by people who look just like you, all after the same part. Make these friendships with people, a little family, fall in love onstage and off and then it's over and you don't see them again. You try not to take it personally when people who aren't as good as you get the parts. When you go from being the sexy ingénue to the tired mother of three.

But you keep going because sometimes, if you're really lucky, you get to be onstage and say things that are absolutely true, even if they're made up. You get to do things which feel more real to you, more authentic, more meaningful than anything in your own life. You get to speak words you would never think to say but which become yours as you speak them.

I played Antigone and every night my heart broke about her dead brother. Then my own brother died and I didn't feel anything. I missed the funeral because I had a matinee. I'm not avoiding talking to the group because I've got something to hide. It's the opposite. If I'm not in character I'm not sure I'm really there. I'm already dead.

Acting gives me the same thing as drugs and alcohol. Good parts are just harder to come by.

I really
I really miss my brother
