Burnham,1997 The study of falcons from the Arctic to the Topics and the relationship and understanding gained from them through falconry has provided me with countless opportunities for learning and occasionally for adventure These pages combine biological information about falcons of the Americas and our natural world with stories and events from my field notes and memory Memories are interesting things They are life s mental streams and rivers which pool and flow eventually becoming reservoirs of conscious and subconscious thought Streams of events and experiences merge to become rivers of associated topics and places creating lakes and through time oceans of memories knowledge and possibly wisdom Like a stone tossed into a pool an event or thought can cause ripples that bring memories of past experiences and emotions to the surface For some of us with age boulders not stones are required The streams and rivers have a few logjams and waterfalls and sometimes the lakes have more suckers that trout The real life experiences reported here are primarily from my early years as a biologist and falconer I wanted to fish those memories out first before the water dries up or they are lost in tomorrows The chapters and sections of the book are arranged geographically and topically but not necessarily chronologically After a brief introduction to the true falcons and my fascination with the the reader travels as the compass points north to Greenland Then moving south that portion pertaining to falconry is focused in temperate western North America Experiences with tropical falcons follow with the final chapter on conservation of falcons wildlife and nature There is also a section suggesting how people can make a positive difference Finally I provide more detailed information on the biology and ecology of falcons in a straight forward manner as an appendix The information is factual and is based on my understanding and research Some stories are humorous I hope others are of adventures and misadventures as I might recount them to my peers over a drink or around the camp fire So pull up a chair or a log A few names may be familiar but most will not be The names of people are not changed to protect the innocent as there are none We must all be guilty of something if nothing else possibly of caring about nature I hope that in these pages the reader will gain some expanded appreciation of nature and a general understanding of falcons and why men and women have admired studied and enjoyed them for millennia A further reward for the investment of time and thought will be any enjoyment this book bay bring to those who honor me by their reading Black Newspapers Index ,2008 Sports Illustrated ,1960
