There is a difference between the two approaches. The first approach is to use the "normal" distribution to model the data. The second approach is to use the "lognormal" distribution to model the data. The lognormal distribution is a distribution that is skewed to the right. It is a distribution that is used to model data that is skewed to the right. The lognormal distribution is a distribution that is used to model data that is skewed to the right. The lognormal distribution is a distribution that is used to model data that is skewed to the right.
