GPGPU Computing with OpenCL Bernhard Manfred Gruber,2014-12-01 Bachelor Thesis from the year 2013 in the subject Computer Science Programming grade 1.0 University of Applied Sciences Oberosterreich Hagenberg course Software Engineering language English abstract This thesis provides an introduction into programming for GPUs using OpenCL After a historical overview of how graphic cards have evolved the peculiarities of GPU and CPU hardware are discussed Based on this knowledge OpenCL is introduced as an API supporting all kinds of processing hardware A deeper look into OpenCL s execution and memory model which allows handling heterogeneous hardware is rounded off by a simple yet full example code The thesis then continues with several implementations of standard algorithms for the GPU. The chosen problems start with matrix multiplication and go along with the all prefix sum and sorting. As the first problem already offers parallelism naturally, performance analysis and optimization is focused during the first implementation chapter. The all prefix sum and sorting are both problems being more difficult to split into independent pieces of work. Techniques will be discussed to tackle such kind of problems. Each GPU implementation is benchmarked and compared with one or more traditional CPU approaches. As GPUs and CPUs have different hardware architectures, appropriate algorithms and optimizations have been chosen to solve the problems by exploiting the underlying platform at best.
