borrowers evaluated the impact of debt after leaving the postsecondary education system in order to see if it is possible to better direct the choices of incoming students so they can minimize their student loan debt This issue brief examines the survey results across four key topics level of education the amount of debt owed the factors considered upon college enrollment and the factors most important after leaving school and entering loan repayment It organizes this information based on the amount of debt students had when they left school and the level of degree they attained The brief also compares this information to the respondents answers about their top factors for choosing a school at the time of enrollment versus their top factors now In particular it examines if borrowers included net price as one of their top five factors for selecting a college at either point
