Recruiting and Retaining America's Finest Jeremy M. Wilson, Bernard Rostker, Cha-Chi Fan, 2010 Personnel management is a critical but oft neglected function of police organizations While much attention is given to recruiting and retention these are only tools for accomplishing a larger goal achieving and maintaining the profile of officers by experience and rank that satisfies agency needs and officer career aspirations Police agencies often have little ability to assess their organization and environment and they receive little guidance on how best to build and maintain their workforces In this monograph the authors seek to fill the gap of information available to police agencies through a survey on their recruitment and retention practices The survey sent to every U S police agency with at least 300 sworn officers sought to document such characteristics as authorized and actual strength by rank officer work and qualifications compensation and recruiting efforts The authors used these data to provide an overview of current recruitment and retention practices to describe how they affected police recruitment and personnel profiles and to identify future research needs Findings include that police compensation city size and crime rates had statistically significant effects on police recruiting Advertising and recruiting incentives had little effect on the number of recruits Cohort sizes and structures highlighted current and future personnel management challenges To facilitate comparative and longitudinal analyses of police staffing the authors recommend ongoing national data collection P 4 of cover
