Ques 1. Describe the roles of RD and RT in MPLS L3VPN?

A Route Distinguisher (RD) separates routes (one VRF for each customer routing table) of one customer from another. RD is prepended to each route (64-bit identifier is prepended) within a VRF to identify which VPN the route belongs to. An RD is carried along with a route via MP-BGP when exchanging VPN routes with other PE routers.

Whereas Route Distinguishers are used to maintain uniqueness among identical routes in different VRFs, Route Targets can be used to share routes among them. We can apply route targets to a VRF to control the import and export of routes among it and other VRFs.

Ques 2. How can you differentiate VPNv4 and IPv4 address-family?

Below table illustrates difference between VPNv4 and IPv4 address-family

| Parameter     | IPv4                                                                                   | VPNv4                                                                               |
|---------------|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| Structure     | IPv4 address consists of IPv4 prefix                                                   | VPNv4 address consists of 64-bit Route Distinguisher (RD) prepended to IPv4 prefix. |
| Usage         | When forwarding ip packets towards customers (generally CE) we use ipv4 address-family | While forwarding labels related to customer packets from one PE to other or to RR.  |
| Scope         | Used generally outside the MPLS Core and for PE-CE communication                       | Used inside the MPLS Core                                                           |
| Configuration | Router(config-router)#address-family vpnv4                                             | Router(config-router)#address-family ipv4 vrf <vrf name>                            |

Ques 3. Is it possible to assign a same RD to multiple customers?

No, as a standard consideration we should not assign same RD for multiple customers.

Ques 4. What are the benefits of using MPLS?

Below is the list of MPLS benefits -

- Any to Any connectivity – Any 2 remote sites under MPLS may communicate to each other rather than traversing through HUB site 1st and then again being rerouted sub optimally to other end remote site.
- Adherence to SLAs and guaranteed packet delivery – MPLS supports QoS, which becomes particularly essential for voice and video services.
- Cost savings – MPLS enables high savings on running costs compared to other data services like frame relay and ATM.
- Traffic routing – At times the shortest path between two locations isn't the best due to congestion. MPLS has ability called Traffic Engineering that enables traffic to be sent over non-standard paths. This significantly helps reduce latency and congestion on the paths.
